

Credit Builder Program – Quick Facts

Should I Open a Credit Builder Loan?

If you have no credit or bad credit, getting a loan may seem impossible.

That's because when lenders are considering a loan application, one of their main concern is whether the applicant can pay the loan back. One way they analyze this is by looking at an applicant's credit history, which shows one's debt and payment history, to determine how likely the applicant can pay off a loan in the future.

If an application has no debt — and therefore no loan repayment history, or a spotty record of late payments or loan defaults, a lender may quickly determine that lending to the applicant would be too risky.

With a Credit Builder, this is one way you can start building a strong credit history that may eventually qualify you for other types of loans – auto, personal or mortgage.

Building good credit, whether you are starting from scratch or repairing a bad credit history, requires patience. You'll need time to show lenders that you are a consistent, reliable borrower who makes on-time debt payments.

A Credit Builder is a great way to begin establishing a good credit history, especially, if you are also focused on addressing any other credit report issues that may exist.

How Does a Credit Builder Work?

A Credit Builder requires you to save money, as you are making payments into an account that is set up similar to a savings account. You DO NOT receive money up front, like a traditional loan, however, your monthly payments are reported to credit reporting agencies as an "installment loan payment".

Example: You, the borrower, pays the loan back, in small monthly installments to the financial institution — with interest — over a set period of time. At the end of the loan's term, you will then receive the total amount of the credit builder loan in a lump sum at the end of the loan period – minus interest and fees, such as NSF or late fees.

When you make all of your required monthly payments, on time, your credit score should improve, as mentioned earlier the lenders report the payments to credit reporting agencies, helping you begin to build a solid credit history.

Note: A Credit Builder may be CLOSED, immediately or within 30-days, if late payments or non-payment occurs, to help ensure that your credit score isn't negatively impacted.

The Bottom Line

While a Credit Builder can be a key step in establishing a strong credit history, it's imperative that you make all of your payments in full and on time. When you are committed to building a strong financial future with personal budgeting and spending discipline, successfully paying off a Credit Builder may lead to approval of better rates and terms on other loans in the future.

At a minimum, you will develop good savings habits through opening a Credit Builder, which requires you to set aside money every month for the payment. Also, as you make payments, on time every month, you will develop financial discipline which you will then be able to apply to all aspects of your personal finances in the future.
